Usual Pasture Methods

Favor Horse Parasites

Parasites attacking horses and mules are favored by the usual methods of pasturing live stock on farms, according to Dr. Benjamin Schwartz of the U. S. bureau of animal industry.

Common methods of pasturing and the habits of horses are particularly favorable to the serious parasitic roundworms or strongyles, a group which also includes the hookworms as 2 parasite on humans. Parasitic attacks lead to a weakness and poor condition and waste of feed and may disable or kill horses and mules if the damage is not checked. Timely medicinal treatment is a desirable aid.

Once an animal is attacked by these roundworms, the natural tendency is for the infestation to increase and to spread to other horses and mules. The eggs of these internal parasites are scattered in the manure where they hatch. They are long-lived and persistent and can exist for months on the moist grasses in pastures where horses graze. Thus the animals take in parasites to renew and aggravate the cycle of infection.

For horse-breeding establishments where the high value of the stock warrants the expense, Doctor Schwartz points out the effectiveness of a relatively new heat treatment. Under this plan the manure is collected and placed in large inclosed boxes where the natural heat, sometimes aided by steam pipes, raises the manure to a temperature that will kill eggs and larvae of the worms.

Caring for Colt

A little attention given to the feet of colts and young horses may make a difference in the value of the horse when ready to work. When colts' feet are allowed to become uneven and crooked, it is almost sure to affect the feet and legs permanently. Keeping the feet trimmed and shaped up properly allows normal development of the legs and prevents defects in the feet and legs. Poorly shaped feet and crooked legs that have resulted from neglect can be corrected in some measure by proper trimming of the feet.

Keep Farm Records

A farmer is a business man—and also a scientist, a merchant, a financier, a manufacturer, and sometimes a weather prophet. A business man keeps records of his profit and loss, and a farmer should do the same, says R. W. Shoffner, a farm management specialist. Money invested in land, equipment, and building is no different from money invested in stocks and bonds. Money invested in stocks and bonds is expected to return the owner a profit. Likewise, an investment in land and farm equipment is expected to yield a profit or give a return on the investment.

In order that weaknesses in the farm setup can be determined and a basis for future operations can be worked out, farm records are highly important.

New Parachute Device

Tested for Air Liners

A method of dropping the passengers of an air liner like bombs and letting them float to earth by parachutes is being perfected by an officer of the Italian air force. He believes that the parachute should be an integral part of air passenger transportation, and that its use in an emergency should be controlled by the pilot, one Lieutenant-Colonel Ferri has devised a means of placing the entire responsibility of landing passengers by parachutes within the pilot's hands.

Safety hooks, worked by an electric mechanism, hold the seats and the entire cabin containing the passengers. If a desperate situation arises, the pilot orders his assistants to supply passengers with parachutes and put them on. By moving a lever he releases the passengers from the cabin, entrusting their lives to the parachutes.

The invention is now being tested in Italy and is expected shortly to become standard equipment on all Italian passenger lines.

Harness Cleaning

Harness is often damaged in winter by acid bearing moisture in closed barns. The dampness rusts buckles and hardware, and the moisture weakens the leather. Rats and mice are not likely to chew a well-oiled harness. Any good weather-foot oil compound will seal the pores in the leather and protect it against acid and dampness, while the oil also protects the metal parts against rust. Before oiling, harness should be taken apart and cleaned and weak parts replaced. After oiling, the harness should be dried in a warm room.

Ancient Egyptian Bread

In the Metropolitan museum of art in New York city, there is a basket containing the oldest bread in the world. This basket of bread was discovered in the tomb of an Egyptian woman by the name of Hathor and her husband, Hat-Nuter, who lived about 3,600 years ago. This ancient bread is a hard, glossy crust. Another seems to be a kind of fruitcake which may have been the wedding cake of this married pair. According to the religious beliefs of ancient Egypt, the soul after death required nourishment, just as in life. Thus, bread was often placed in the tombs.
